

Mobile Web Survey

June 2010

Mobile marketing encompasses a wide array of technologies and channels: apps, websites, text messaging, and advertising. Circle44 Mobile's web survey focuses on the websites specifically designed for the mobile handset.

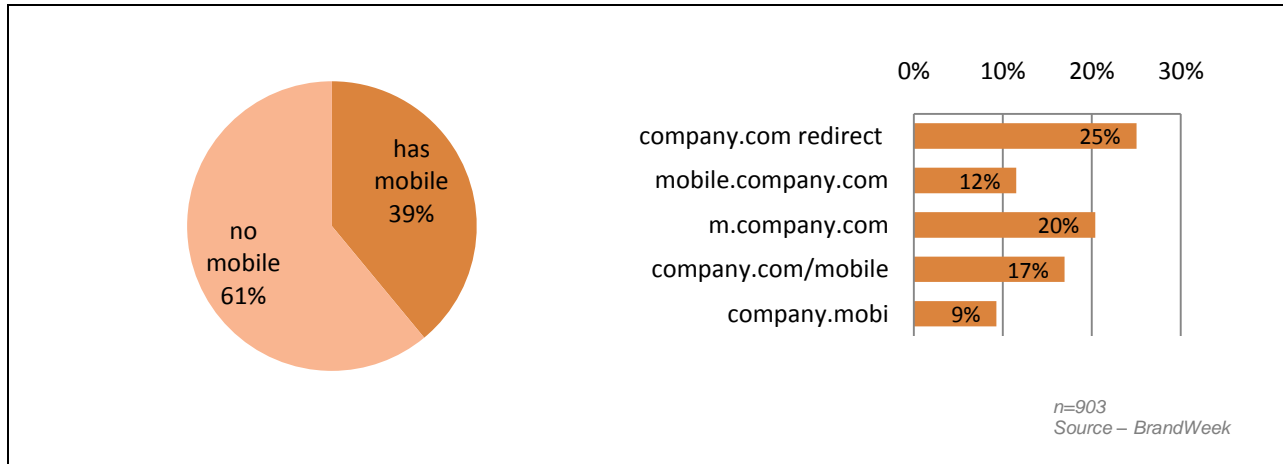

WHAT'S CHANGED?

Retailers saw this biggest gain in mobile this month, with a 3% increase in mobile sites. Some of the notable site launches within the last month were Olay, Qwest, and Hotels.com. Qwest's site has the most functionality of any new sites, offering user the ability to pay bills, review past statements, find out information about the company, and communicate with a customer service representative. Hotels.com also has a lot to offer the user, allowing them to find a hotel, review a reservation, speak with a customer care agent, and join the rewards program.

METHODOLOGY

The June 2010 Circle44 Mobile survey was conducted during the first week of June 2010. All data was collected based on the experience of an iPhone user visiting the selected websites. Top brand lists were based on the best available data at the time of the survey. To create the best equity possible, brands that were created with staggered release timing, such as movies and video games, were not included in the survey.

The main domain for each brand, as reported by a Yahoo search, was examined through five versions: the domain itself, mobile.domain.com, m.domain.com, domain.com/mobile and domain.mobi. The resulting page was analyzed to determine if it was in fact a mobile-friendly web page. For the purposes of this survey, mobile-friendly is defined as a site designed specifically for a smaller screen, less than 640x480.
